

Seattle's Central Waterfront Plan Charrette 2004

Department of Planning and Development
City of Seattle, Greg Nickels, Mayor

No Small Plans!

Create an Urban Waterfront in the Tradition of Modern Progressive Cities

TEAM
2

Team Narrative

Team 2: No Small Plans!

With No Small Plans!, Team 2 seeks to create an urban waterfront in the tradition of modern, progressive cities, balancing the business, residential, and tourist experiences, and integrating economic opportunity and community responsibility within a greatly improved transportation infrastructure.

After replacing the Viaduct with a tunnel, Team No Small Plans! focused on intensifying the waterfront experience by “providing powerful landmarks that invite participation and inspire wonder.” These landmarks include strategically-placed islands and peninsulas containing a variety of uses. The locations of these islands provide important view corridors: termination and integration points with the east/west downtown urban grid. A layering of uses—with tunnels, bridges, marinas, light rail and a supplanted Key Arena—will provide Seattleites with multiple opportunities to re-experience the waterfront on a daily basis. Forming a gateway to the city, Tatlin-like towers integrate economic development and cultural amenities with monumental sculptural forms.

Within the overall vision, the waterfront breaks down into sub-neighborhood, and each neighborhood—like Belltown —maintains a unique personality, maximizing opportunities to create livable, active urban environments that emphasize views, urban green space, waterfront transportation and recreation, and economic development.

Team Participants

Team 2: No Small Plans!

Rob Berman

Wyn Bielaska

Marc Chavez

Victoria Cho

Bob Erickson

Ben Ferguson

Eric Higbee

Keasa Jones

Supriya Kelkar

Kim Krech

David Mattern

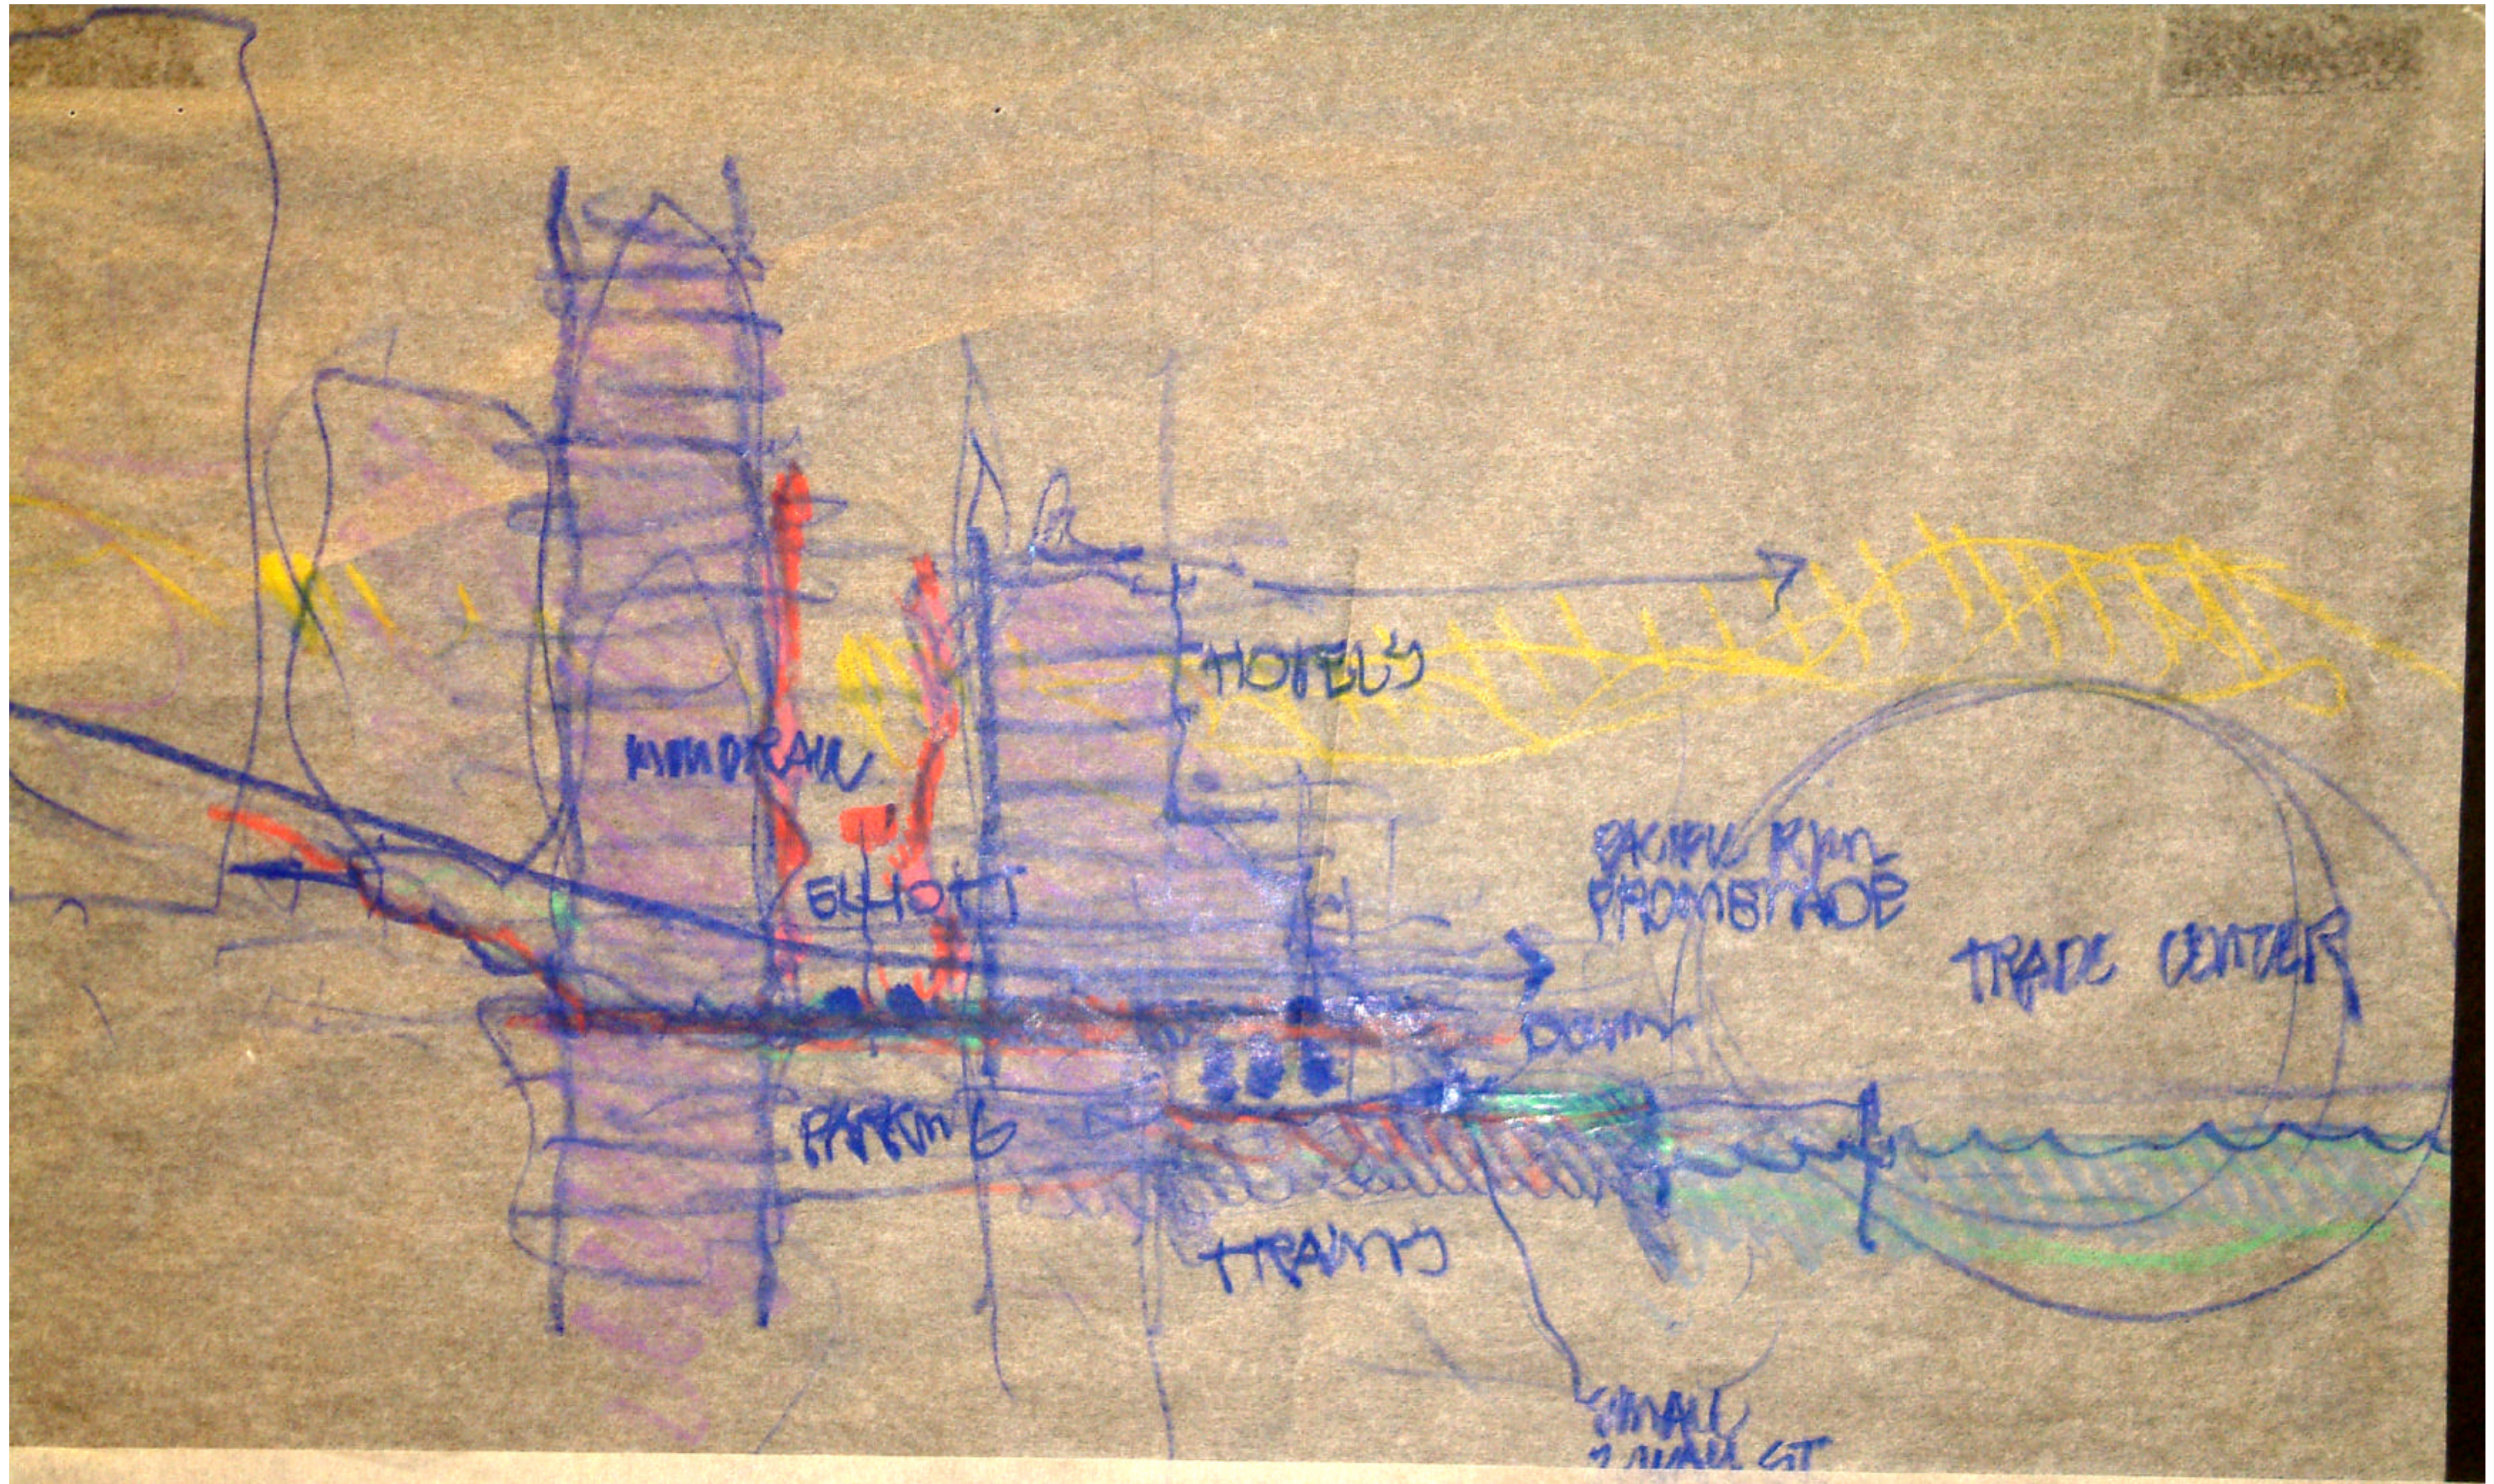

Scott Matthews

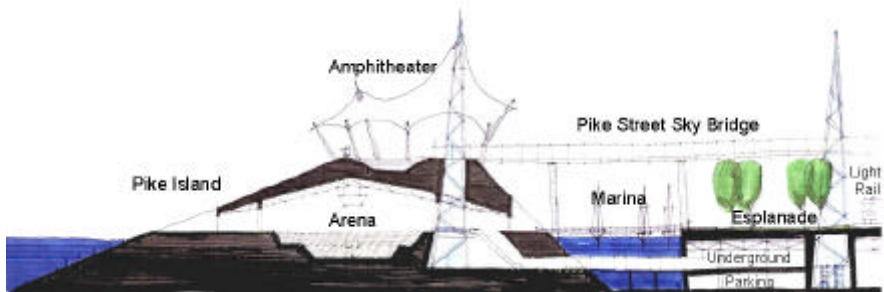

John Outtersen

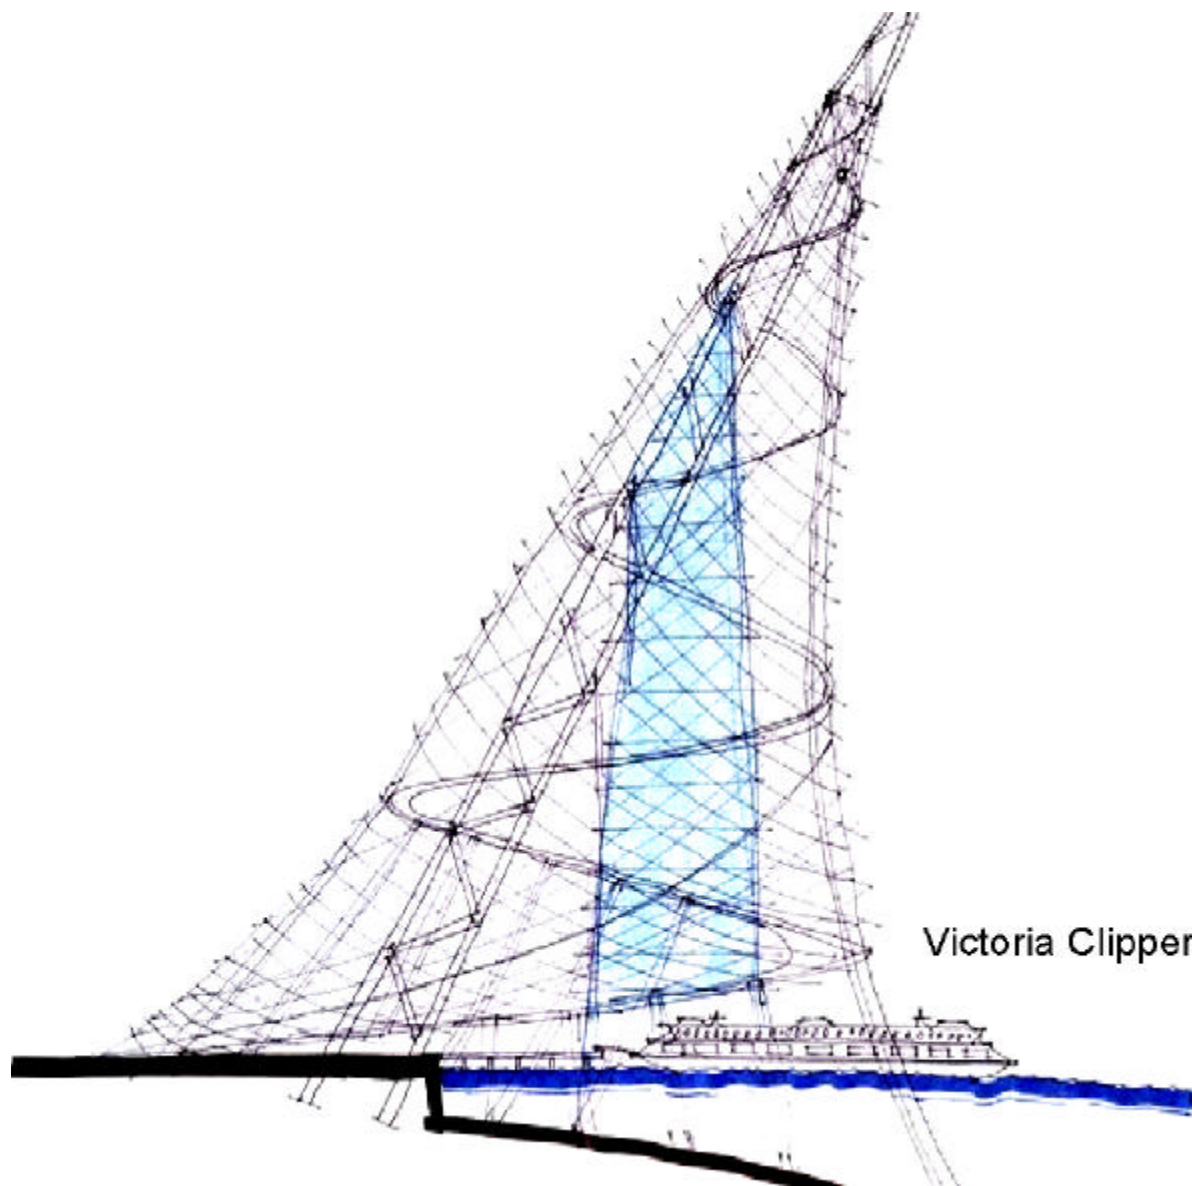

Dave Pool

Celeste Tell

Victoria Clipper Doc

